LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY

With a system of around 2,000 route miles, the LNWR was one of the "Big Three" pregrouping companies. Its main line linked London, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester and other major centres of population while, with the Caledonian Railway, the company was responsible for the operation of important Anglo-Scottish express services between Euston and Glasgow. In addition, the LNWR network included numerous branch lines and cross-country routes such as the Central Wales line, the "Oxbridge" route and the Windermere branch. For completeness, the list includes a number of joint lines such as the LNWR/LYR system in the Fylde, together with the North London Railway (NLR), the West London Railway, the West London Extension (WLER) and Garstang & Knott End (G&KE) lines. It should be noted that the North London Railway reached as far west as Camden Town, the section of line between Camden Town and Acton Wells Junction being LNWR property (although the NLR worked most of the trains, which continued south-westwards to Kew Bridge and Richmond).
